RATIONALE: On February 17, 2011, the Idaho State Board of Education suspended the Faculty Senate at Idaho State University and replaced it with an interim faculty advisory structure. A week earlier, the Faculty Senate had conducted a vote of no-confidence in president Arthur C. Vailas, which passed by 72% to 18%, with a voter turnout of 77%. The no-confidence vote was a culmination of on-going disagreements between the Faculty Senate and the president over the restructuring of the university, including faculty representation in shared governance. Such a retaliatory act is deplorable, since it violates both the principle of shared governance and of academic freedom.

Furthermore, it creates fear among the faculty and runs contrary to the mission statement of the university, which aims "to develop citizens who will learn from the past, think critically about the present, and provide leadership to enrich the future in a diverse, global society" (<http://www.isu.edu/president/statement.shtml>). Faculty governance is essential to the very nature of an institution of higher learning. Especially in times of budgetary and political crises, the voice of faculty is absolutely critical in maintaining and forwarding the mission and goals of higher education. The full voice of the faculty cannot be represented by a governance model imposed by the administration, as suggested by the Idaho State Board of Education. Credible representation can only be achieved by a representative body elected by the entire faculty, a body that essentially reports only to the faculty and one which can act without fear of retaliatory repercussions.
